

WANTED

WARRIORS FOR

GOD'S CAUSE

JANET WATSON

Table of Contents

1. The Well: Where Thirst Meets Calling
2. Wanted: Warriors for God's Cause
3. Redefining Strength: Warriors in the Heat of Battle
4. The Battleground: Where the Fight Takes Place
5. The Unseen War: Battles Beyond What We See
6. Weapons of a Warrior: Faith, Hope, and Love
7. Marching Orders: Living Out Your Assignment
8. The Well Revisited: For the Sake of the World

Chapter One: The Well—Where Thirst Meets Calling

We live in a world that's cracked right down the middle. You don't have to look far to see it. Turn on the news, scroll through your phone, walk down the street—there it is: pain, loneliness, anger, division. It's tempting to get used to it, to shrug and say, "That's just how things are." Maybe you've even caught yourself thinking, "What difference can I really make?"

But God isn't tired. He isn't shrugging. And He hasn't stopped calling people to do something about it.

There's a story in the Bible about a woman who comes to a well in the heat of the day. She's worn out, carrying the weight of her mistakes, and probably hoping she won't run into anyone. But there she finds Jesus, waiting. He asks her for water, but it turns out He's the one offering her a new life. A different kind of water—something that would really satisfy.

That's what the well is about. It's a meeting place. It's where God finds us when we're thirsty for something real, something better. And it's where He calls us to more.

God's cause isn't about building armies in the usual sense. It's about raising people who are tired of watching the world break and who want to do something about it. People who are willing to stand up for those getting left behind, who aren't afraid to speak up, even when it's risky. People who don't just believe in God—they're willing to fight for what He cares about.

Warriors like that don't show up by accident. They're called. They're shaped by the things they see, by the pain that keeps them awake at night, by the feeling that they can't just look away anymore. They put on God's armour, not to fight people, but to fight for people. They use their voices to stand up for those who can't speak. They refuse to let fear or apathy write the story.

Maybe you feel like you're not strong enough. Maybe you've been burned, let down, or told you don't matter. But God isn't looking for the perfect. He's looking for the willing. The ones who are thirsty for something real and ready to answer when He calls.

This world is broken. Some days it feels like it's breaking faster than we can fix it. But you are not powerless. You're not here by accident. You are wanted—needed—for a cause bigger than yourself. The well is where it starts. The calling is simple, but it's not easy: stand up, suit up, and don't let the darkness have the last word.

Are you ready to step into the fight?

Chapter Two: Wanted—Warriors for God’s Cause

God’s cause isn’t a secret. It’s not hidden behind locked doors or reserved for a select few with spotless records. The truth is, God’s cause is as wide as the wounds of this world, and the invitation is open—loud, relentless, sometimes just a whisper in the dark.

Maybe you’ve felt it. The ache when you see injustice—kids going hungry, families splintered, people shoved to the margins and told they’re not worth much. The frustration when lies get louder than truth, when cruelty seems to win, when kindness feels outnumbered. That’s not just your conscience. That’s the fingerprints of God on your heart.

But here’s the thing: God’s cause needs actual people. He doesn’t just need “good Christians.” He needs warriors—people who won’t settle for easy answers or comfortable lives, who will step into the mess and say, “If no one else will, I will.” Not because they love a fight, but because they can’t ignore the brokenness anymore.

If you look at the stories God has written in the past, you’ll see a pattern. He almost never picks the obvious heroes. Moses couldn’t speak well. David was a forgotten kid. Esther was terrified. Peter couldn’t keep his foot out of his mouth. But God wanted them. He called them, right in the middle of their doubts and weaknesses, because He saw what they could become.

It’s the same today. The world is desperate for people who will stand up for what’s good, who will risk being misunderstood, who will keep showing up even when hope feels thin. The call isn’t just for the skilled, the educated, or the “spiritual.” It’s for the willing. For the ones who are tired of letting darkness win by default. For the ones who are ready to put on God’s armor—not to crush, but to protect; not to conquer, but to heal.

You’re wanted. Not as a backup plan, but as part of the answer this world is starving for. You’re not too far gone, too broken, or too small. God’s cause makes room for all of us—especially the unlikely warriors.

The world is getting more broken by the day, but that’s not the end of the story. Every time someone says yes—every time someone stands up, speaks out, or loves when it’s hardest—something shifts. Light gets in. Things start to change.

God’s cause isn’t waiting for tomorrow. It’s happening now. And He’s looking for people who are ready to step up, suit up, and fight for what’s right.

Will you answer the call?

Chapter Three: Redefining Strength—Warriors in the Heat of Battle

Let's be honest: the enemy isn't playing games. Sometimes it feels like the darkness in this world has teeth. There's a real pushback whenever someone tries to make things right, to speak up, to love well. The brokenness isn't just "out there"—it pushes in, whispers doubts, throws up roadblocks, and tries to wear us down until we give up.

The Bible doesn't sugarcoat this. It tells us straight: "Your enemy the devil prowls around like a roaring lion looking for someone to devour." (1 Peter 5:8) Jesus Himself faced temptation, opposition, betrayal, and a cross. The early church was hounded by threats, mockery, and violence. If you step into God's cause, the pushback is real.

But so is the victory.

Here's the truth that can't be shaken: the battle's already been decided. When Jesus died on the cross and walked out of the tomb, He broke the enemy's claim on us. That's not wishful thinking or religious talk—it's the ground we stand on. The cross doesn't just offer forgiveness, it marks Satan's defeat. It says, "You don't get the last word."

But God, in His wisdom, doesn't just snap His fingers and make all the problems vanish. Instead, He calls us into the fight—with His own armour, His own strength, His own Spirit. Because on our own, we're not enough. But with Him, we can put the enemy to flight.

God's training doesn't look like the world's. He teaches us to pray when we want to panic, to forgive when we want to retaliate, to keep trusting when everything in us wants to run. He gives us the armour of truth, righteousness, peace, faith, salvation, and His own Word (Ephesians 6:10-18). Each one is forged for a reason—each one turns back the blows that would take us out.

The enemy is ferocious, but God is greater. Through Him, we don't just survive—we overcome. Every time you stand your ground in faith, every time you resist the lies and cling to the truth, every time you speak hope where there's despair, you're putting Satan to your heels. You're reminding him that he's lost.

Chapter Four: The Battleground—Where the Fight Takes Place

It's easy to picture warriors on a battlefield, swords drawn, banners flying. But most of the real battles aren't so obvious. For most of us, the fight isn't against flesh and blood, but against the things that sneak in quietly—discouragement, fear, cynicism, the temptation to give up or look away.

The Bible says, “Our struggle is not against flesh and blood, but against the rulers, against the authorities, against the powers of this dark world and against the spiritual forces of evil” (Ephesians 6:12). The enemy knows that if he can't destroy us, he'll settle for distracting us. He'll whisper that we're powerless, that our efforts don't matter, that nothing ever really changes.

Sometimes the battleground is internal. It's the fight to keep believing when prayers seem unanswered. It's the struggle to forgive when you've been hurt again and again. It's the war against bitterness, apathy, and the slow creep of compromise. These aren't small skirmishes. They're the places where victories and defeats are measured in inches—where faith is tested and character is forged.

Other times, the fight is out in the open. Maybe it's standing up for someone who's being bullied or ignored. Maybe it's challenging an injustice at work or in your community, even when it costs you. Maybe it's just showing up—over and over—for people who've lost hope, refusing to let them fall through the cracks.

The battleground can be anywhere: a kitchen table, a hospital room, a classroom, a crowded street. It's wherever darkness pushes in and someone decides not to let it win.

The enemy will try to convince you that your battles aren't “spiritual enough” to matter. Don't believe it. Every act of love, every honest conversation, every time you choose truth over convenience or kindness over anger, you're fighting. You're claiming ground for the kingdom of God.

It's not glamorous. Sometimes it feels like two steps forward, one step back. But every victory—no matter how small—counts. Every time you refuse to give up, every time you pray when you're weary, every time you show up and keep going, you're making a difference.

So pay attention to the battlegrounds in your life. Don't dismiss them because they seem ordinary. The enemy loves to work in the shadows, but God's light can reach even the darkest corners. You don't fight alone. God is with you, and so are countless others answering the same call.

The battle is real, but so is the victory. And every day you choose to stand, you're pushing back the darkness.

Are you willing to fight, even when the world isn't watching?

Chapter Five: The Unseen War—Battles Beyond What We See

Some battles are loud and obvious, unfolding right in front of us. But the fiercest fights often happen in places no one else can see. The Bible pulls back the curtain and tells us straight: there's a war raging in the spiritual realms, all around us, all the time.

It can feel strange to talk about an invisible war. We're used to fighting what's right in front of us—problems we can see, people we can name, pain we can touch. But Scripture says our real enemy isn't flesh and blood. The real fight is against spiritual forces—the enemy who schemes in the shadows, who would love nothing more than for us to live unaware, defeated, and afraid.

The story of Daniel gives us a glimpse of this reality. Daniel prayed for help, and for weeks, nothing seemed to happen. But behind the scenes, an angel was fighting to bring the answer, held up by spiritual opposition (Daniel 10:12-14). What looked like silence was actually a battle in progress. Daniel never saw it, but his prayers mattered. His faith tipped the scales.

It's the same for us. We pray, we trust, we stand on God's promises—even when we can't see the immediate results. Sometimes it feels like nothing's changing, like the darkness is winning. But God's Word says otherwise. Through Jesus, the victory has already been won. The cross wasn't just a moment in history—it was a cosmic triumph, a declaration to every power and principality that their reign is over.

We fight from victory, not for it. That changes everything. It means we can pray boldly, love fiercely, and stand firm, even when doubt creeps in. It means that every act of faith—every quiet prayer, every stubborn hope, every choice to trust God's goodness—is a weapon in this unseen war.

The enemy works hard to make us believe we're alone, that our struggles are pointless, that our prayers bounce off the ceiling. Don't buy it. The truth is, heaven moves when God's people stand their ground. Angels are dispatched, strongholds are broken, chains fall—sometimes in ways we'll never see this side of eternity.

So when you feel like your efforts don't matter, remember: you are part of something much bigger than you can imagine. You might not see the battle, but you can be certain of the victory. The empty tomb is proof. The Spirit inside you is proof. And every day you wake up and refuse to surrender, you're living proof.

The fight is real, and so is the victory. Even when you can't see it yet.

Will you keep standing, trusting that God is working in ways beyond what you see?

Chapter Six: Weapons of a Warrior—Faith, Hope, and Love

Most believers have heard about the armor of God. We've read the verses, maybe even memorized them as kids. But here's the question: Is God's armor just something we know about, or is it something we actually wear? Is it fitted to us, a part of our daily life, or is it sitting unused in the closet of our minds?

It's easy to talk about truth, righteousness, faith, and the rest. It's something else to wake up every morning and put them on, piece by piece, until they feel like second skin. The enemy doesn't wait for us to get ready. The battles come whether we're prepared or not. If God's armor isn't real to us—if it's just an idea and not a reality—we're walking into a war unprotected.

Ask yourself: Is the belt of truth buckled around your waist, or do you let small lies slip by, telling yourself they don't matter? Is the breastplate of righteousness something you trust in, or do you try to fight in your own strength, hoping no one sees the cracks? Are your feet fitted with the readiness that comes from the gospel of peace, or do you find yourself anxious and reactive, easily knocked off balance?

The shield of faith is meant to be lifted high, but sometimes we set it down because doubt feels easier or disappointment has worn us thin. The helmet of salvation is designed to guard our minds, but do we let old wounds or fresh accusations seep in and shape our identity? The sword of the Spirit—God's Word—is sharper than any weapon, but does it sit unopened, gathering dust, while we scramble for answers elsewhere?

Preparation isn't a one-time thing. Warriors check their gear, train with it, sleep with it nearby. They know battles rarely announce themselves. If we only reach for God's armor in a crisis, we'll find ourselves exposed and scrambling when the fight hits hardest.

The real test isn't how well we recite the list, but how deeply God's armor shapes our lives. Do we live with it? Is it always there, woven into our choices, our reactions, our relationships? If not, we're not ready—not for the battles ahead, not for the enemy's schemes, not for the calling on our lives.

God's armor isn't just for the spiritual elite. It's for anyone who says yes to the fight. But it has to be real—a lived reality, not just a Sunday school memory. Every day, we have to put it on, ask God to fit it to us, and refuse to take it off. The world is too broken, the battles too fierce, to go in half-dressed.

So, are you prepared? Is the armor fitted to you, or is it just a story you've heard? Today is the day to make it real. Ask God to help you wear it, to make it your own, to give you the strength to stand—fully equipped, fully ready.

Because the fight isn't coming. It's already here.

Are you ready for it?

Chapter Seven: Marching Orders—Living Out Your Assignment

Preparation means nothing if it never leads to action. Armor is made to be worn in the field, not admired on a mannequin. God isn't just calling you to suit up—He's calling you to move, to step into the story He's writing, and to play your part in the fight for what's right.

Every warrior has marching orders. Sometimes they're loud and obvious—a sudden call to go, a need that can't be ignored. More often, they're quieter: a nudge to reach out to someone hurting, a conviction to speak truth in a place of compromise, the persistent urge to serve in a hidden way. God's assignments aren't always dramatic, but they're always significant.

The world doesn't need more spectators. It needs people willing to do the small, faithful things—because that's where real change starts. Maybe your calling is to stand up for the voiceless in your neighborhood, to shape young lives as a parent or teacher, to pray quietly behind the scenes, or to offer practical help where others have walked away. No assignment is too small when it's God who gives it.

You might be tempted to wait until you feel fully ready. But God rarely calls the already-prepared. He prepares those He calls, shaping them in the field, not the classroom. Moses argued with God about his weaknesses; Jeremiah said he was too young; Esther was terrified of the cost. But when they stepped forward, God moved through them—changing nations, saving lives, rewriting destinies.

Your assignment may not make headlines, but it matters. Every act of obedience, every step of faith, every refusal to give up—these are the building blocks of God's kingdom on earth. The enemy wants you to believe your part is too small to matter. Don't buy it. The body of Christ is built on countless hidden acts of courage, kindness, and faithfulness.

So what are your marching orders? Where is God nudging you today? Maybe it's a person you need to forgive, a conversation you've been afraid to have, a risk you've been putting off. Maybe it's as simple as showing up, day after day, when everyone else seems to have given up. Trust that God can and will use you—right where you are, with what you have.

Don't wait for perfect conditions. The fight is now. Your assignment is now. And the world needs what only you can bring.

Chapter Eight: The Well Revisited—For the Sake of the World

Listen. The time isn't someday, it's now. God's call isn't a gentle suggestion—it's a shout across the battlefield, a plea that cuts through the noise and reaches straight to your heart: "Who will go for Me? Who will fight for these souls? Who will bring My lost children home?"

There are people all around you who cannot wait any longer. They're drowning in loneliness, fear, addiction, and shame. Some have never heard that they're loved by God; others have heard, but never believed it could be true for them. Every day, the darkness takes root where no one stands to push it back. Every day, another heart breaks without a word of hope.

Heaven isn't unmoved. God sees every tear, every desperate prayer, every person slipping through the cracks. And His answer—again and again—is to send someone who will not look away. Someone who will step into the fight, into the harvest, into the pain. Someone who will say, "Here I am. Send me."

You are that someone. This is not a call for tomorrow, or when life slows down, or when you feel more ready. The urgency is real. The need is now. The world is still broken, and it will stay broken unless warriors rise and harvesters move. God isn't looking for perfection—He's looking for willingness. He wants people who will carry His love into the places that scare them, people who will offer His truth even when their voice shakes, people who will see the faces in the crowd and know: that's who I'm here for.

You're not just called to survive. You are called to rescue, to heal, to gather, to fight for those who cannot fight for themselves. The harvest is waiting, but the workers are few. God is calling your name. He's not asking for someone else—He's asking for you.

Let this be the moment you say yes—not just in your head, but with your whole life. Step out. Suit up. Love fiercely. Speak boldly. Go where He sends you. The battles are real, but so is the victory. The harvest is ready, but it needs your hands.

God's call is urgent. The time is now. Will you answer—for the sake of the world, and for the heart of God Himself?

Preface

There's a well in every life—a deep place of hunger, of longing for something more. In these pages, you'll find an invitation to step into the battlefield of a broken world, not just as a bystander, but as a warrior called by God Himself. This is not a call for the perfect, but for the willing. The world needs hope, truth, and love—and God's plan has always been to send ordinary people with extraordinary courage. Are you ready to answer?

About the Author

[I am a passionate believer in the power of faith lived out loud. Drawing from years of personal experience, biblical study, and walking through real struggles, I write to encourage others to embrace their God-given calling. Whether speaking, writing, or serving in the trenches, I am committed to helping others find courage, purpose, and hope in the fight that matters most.

